

In an interview Amit Shah said “An individual must run a political party for understanding what are the challenges” – which actually involves millions of members, opinions, values, good work/bad work. Good governance is not only about good responsible political community but it also consist of good responsible citizens and everything is all about education, citizen centric politicians, educated responsible citizens and citizen centric government officials. In India gradually the gaps are minimising and country is moving towards good governance model – Viksit Bharat. Citizens must value work, efforts of politicians and politicians must also understand their responsibility towards common citizens, country and the world – resources of the country must be utilised only for social good, uplifting common citizens, national good, global good. Many times it is seen that government officials, politicians do not understand their responsibility towards common citizens and country – similar thing is observed in common citizens who also many times do not understand their responsibility towards government and country. In this whole process resources of the country, time get wasted. It is important to value time, good work and increase the process of continuous improvement of system for good governance in the country.

In several states of India, countries worldwide it is seen that good work and bad work of common citizens, companies and politicians either improved or spoiled the economic growth of the country. Ultimately some good polticians, some good companies and some good citizens take the responsibility to improve the country. Be good, do good. Amit Shah & Narendra Modi changed India and improved the country, all states. India is large country and for its complete transformation, very important that government, education institutes take responsibilty to end corruption, crime. India is fortunate to have many responsible political leaders and many responsible good government officials who are still not corrupt and who are working with Prime Minister Narendra Modi for improving good governance model in all states of India. Many state level senior political leaders, Chief Ministers have strong sense of responsibilty for their duty towards public, education system, who work to uplift not to exploit. Save citizens, save country, save the world which is more meaningful then creating political imbalance, anarchy. India needs more Jansewak similar to Narendra Modi, Amit Shah who are selfless, who work for the country, who uplift all citizens without discrimination, who are making India Viksit Bharat. Similar to ending Naxalism – Amit Shah and other good politicians will do more social good for all states of India, improving life of all citizens for making India Atmanirbhar – ending crime, corruption. India is vibrant economy and there are many respectful politicians, companies, government officials, industry organisations like FICCI, Assocham, PHD Chamber, CII who did something good for the country, who gave something good to the country, whose work uplifted the country, added grace to India worldwide and similarly there are politicians, companies, government officials who looted the country, whose work negatively affected the country, common citizens, environment and economy.

India, every country needs more politicians, companies, government officials, common citizens who can do something good everyday and add value to national good, global good, peace worldwide and increase sustainable economic development.
